

Narcissism: Problems and Solutions for Mental Health Providers

Presented by

Daniel J. Fox, Ph.D.

Overview

This course addresses the challenges of treating clients with Narcissistic Personality Disorder (NPD), emphasizing the time-consuming yet intriguing nature of such cases. Beyond the narcissistic clients themselves, therapists often find themselves working with partners and children who have developed issues from relationships with individuals along the narcissistic spectrum. The prevalence of narcissism in various settings, including treatment offices and workplaces, necessitates a broader understanding of associated behaviors and symptomatology. The seminar focuses on equipping mental health professionals with the skills to effectively manage and work with narcissistic spectrum clients, their partners, and their children. Dr Fox will focus on the unique challenges posed by partners in narcissistic spectrum relationships, providing specific therapeutic approaches. Additionally, the webinar also addresses the complex symptoms exhibited by children of narcissistic spectrum parents and offers tools and techniques to help them overcome burdens and achieve positive change. The course promises a unique, enjoyable, and impactful learning experience for professionals seeking to enhance their ability to navigate the complexities of treating individuals along the narcissistic spectrum and their families.

Objectives: Participants will be able to:

- Discriminate how to formulate a treatment strategy to achieve positive outcomes for individuals along the narcissistic spectrum.
- Integrate evidence-based techniques to address and modify maladaptive patterns in clients on the narcissistic spectrum, as well as their partners and children.
- Identify proficiency in guiding narcissistic spectrum clients, their partners, and their children towards acquiring adaptive relationship skills while managing maladaptive relationship patterns.
- Restructure the elements that anchor partners in narcissistic spectrum relationships, promoting resilience against manipulative behaviors.
- Identify the type and impact of various narcissistic spectrum parent categories to enhance treatment effectiveness.
- Describe proficient assessment, management, and treatment skills concerning children of parents on the narcissistic spectrum.
